

International indexes show lack of progress on democracy and human rights

Since becoming a member of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) in 1997, Laos has consistently ranked near the bottom of many international indexes and rankings compiled by independent organizations that measure respect for democratic principles and key civil and political rights.

Laos has been categorized as an “authoritarian regime” (the lowest possible category) in every Democracy Index published by the Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU) since it first began in 2006.

Since 1997, Freedom House has rated Laos as ‘Not Free’ with regard to the situation of civil liberties and political rights, as well as its press freedom. In its Press Freedom Index, Reporters Without Borders (RSF) has consistently ranked Laos among the bottom 15 countries surveyed since the creation of the index in 2002.

Key indexes surveying the global situation regarding human trafficking, religious freedom, corruption, and economic freedom showed that Laos has made little to no progress in these areas.

In 2016, the US Department of State placed Laos on the ‘Tier 2 Watch List’ (the second-lowest ranking) in its Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report for the third consecutive year. The United States Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) has, since 2009, listed Laos as ‘Tier 2’ – used for countries that require close monitoring due to the nature and extent of violations engaged in or tolerated by governments. In 2005, when Transparency International first included Laos in its Corruption Perceptions Index, Laos ranked in the top half of the 159 countries surveyed. Since then, it has fallen to the 27th lowest ranking in 2015. The Heritage Foundation has rated Laos’ economic freedom either “mostly unfree” or “repressed” in its annual Index of Economic Freedom since 1997.
